Employment Law

Championing The Rights of Whistleblowers

"I am extremely motivated to stand up for the legal rights of workers who've unfairly lost employment, experienced harassment, or faced discrimination in the workplace," says this law Luminary with over three decades of experience representing the rights of workers, including many high profile whistleblowers. Holding wrongdoers accountable for their behavior through the courts has been his motivation since watching his father face wrongful termination from his job shortly before retirement. Since that defining moment, he has litigated and won millions of dollars from some of the nation's largest institutions for his clients who have found themselves on the other end of unlawful employment practices. "I see employment law as part of the struggle for social justice," adds the Greene Broillet & Wheeler Partner who spent his career as an underdog trial lawyer.
